(C) On Tuesday, 12 July 2005 the SINIO Council and the National Cryptologic School are pleased to present the 5th in a series of Strategic Intelligence Issue Seminars for the Summer 2005. "Future Military Capability in a Wartime Environment -- Dealing with an Unstable Environment" will be presented by the SINIO for Conventional Military Issues, Mr. [REDACTED] on Tuesday, 12 July from 11:30 to 13:00 in room 2E099. Advance registration is required.

Registration:

(C) Eligible SID students interested in attending this brown-bag session should enroll for class number 7533 using Peoplesoft. Enrollment will be first come, first served. In case of difficulties with Peoplesoft an email can be sent to Roland Recker ([REDACTED]@nsa) with the following information, and include the course name (AREA 1500 -- "Future Military Capability in a Wartime Environment -- Dealing with an Unstable Environment"), your name, SSN and organization.

Course Overview:

(C) The Army's massive desert battleground needs to be updated to train troops to fight and stabilize societies in urban environments. To meet growing Intel needs, the military services will need to change the way they educate and train their troops, "If military elements are going to observe at the social level, then they have to have some skills at that level similar to the notion that technical intelligence needs require certain technical skills. For the future, the Pentagon has realized that there will be new elements essential to claim a victory -- one which must primarily emphasize post-combat work, or a level of effective "social intelligence." Becoming increasingly more important to troops in the "new-age battlefield will be foreign area studies, and studies that highlight culture, political systems, languages and social structure. Military power is only one item in a long list of social, political, and economic tasks that will be as important to victory, or even more so, than bombs, missiles, and guns.
